

Rebel or Victim?

For each of the following, decide whether the child is a rebel or a victim. Give reasons for your answer.

Consider how your perception of the incident might be changed.

- A child is left out from the family group, because the family claim they have an unsociable personality.
- The child questions this treatment.
- The child finds a book and hides away to read it.
- Someone else goes looking for the child, calling her names – she stays where she is.
- A member of the child's family insists she calls him Master.
- The child is hit for being rude.
- After someone throws a book at her, the child retaliates.
- The child is punished by being locked in a room.

Rebel or Victim?

For each of the following, decide whether the child is a rebel or a victim. Give reasons for your answer.

Consider how your perception of the incident might be changed.

- A child is left out from the family group, because the family claim they have an unsociable personality.
- The child questions this treatment.
- The child finds a book and hides away to read it.
- Someone else goes looking for the child, calling her names – she stays where she is.
- A member of the child's family insists she calls him Master.
- The child is hit for being rude.
- After someone throws a book at her, the child retaliates.
- The child is punished by being locked in a room.