

Edna O'Brien was quoted recently as saying that in the writing of fiction, 'let us never under-estimate the motive of revenge'*; to what extent do you think revenge is apparent in Charlotte Brontë's writing of Jane Eyre and how does it affect our sympathies when reading the novel?

(Guardian* newspaper 26th April 2008)